

Becoming the coach you don't yet know you could be

Ten years have passed since David Clutterbuck and the late David Megginson published their seminal paper introducing the concept of coach maturity. Substantial research has built on this concept to throw light onto how coaches evolve in the depth, quality and impact of their practice. This unique, evidence-based workshop by David Clutterbuck shares critical lessons from the research and provides an extensive toolkit for managing your evolution as a coach. Amongst the topics explored are:

- The four stages of coach maturity – evolving skills, identity and mind frame
- Why and how mature coaches let go of much of what they learned as beginners: mastery occurs when we learn how to break the rules
- How to build the quality of your reflective practice
- How mature coaches use themselves and their wisdom to enhance clients' learning
- How mature coaches see systems, where immature coaches see client problems
- Why it's important to free ourselves from goal obsession
- How to become a mature supervisee
- Creating a learning plan that will accelerate your evolution and manage transitions towards maturity as a coach.

About the workshop presenter

Prof David Clutterbuck is one of the last surviving, active pioneers of modern coaching and mentoring. Visiting professor in the coaching and mentoring faculties of four universities, he is author or co-author 75 books, the latest being a celebration of 45 years at the forefront of the field. David is a Distinguished Research Fellow of The Conference Board, Special Ambassador for the European Mentoring and Coaching Council and a Chartered Companion of the Chartered Institute of Personnel and Development. His leisure interests include writing children's stories and stand-up comedy.